Cerro Gordo, Inyo Co, P O 40 miles s e of Independence, on Buena Vista mountain, one of the Inyo range which borders Owens lake and valley on the east, is a prosperous mining town. The section of country in which it is located is desolate and barren, but numerous veins of argentiferous galena redeem the desert, and make it the chosen home of man. The mines were discovered in 1865 by some Mexicans, who demonstrated in a simple manner that the ores could be smelted with profit. The Union, and the Santa Maria are the principal mines, the former furnishing the ore that is smelted in the furnaces of Cerro Gordo, the latter sending its ore to the furnaces at Swansea, on the shore of Owens lake. These several furnaces produce lead bullion in large quantities, from twenty to forty thousand pounds daily, which is transported by steamer across the lake, then by wagons to San Fernando, about 200 miles, where it is taken on cars via Los Angeles to San Pedro, for shipment to San Francisco for separating and refining. The Los Angeles and Independence Railroad, now proposed, called for by the large business of Cerro Gordo, will greatly facilitate the business of this rich mineral region.

Chico, Butte Co, P O 25 miles n w of Oroville, is a flourishing town of 5,000 inhabitants, and is an important station on the line of the California and Oregon railroad, 95 1/2 miles from Sacramento. This pleasant village is located on the southeast bank of Chico creek, where it debouches upon the plain, six miles from the Sacramento river. The broad and fertile valley of the Sacramento embraces it, and to the eastward rises the heavily timbered region of the Sierra Nevada, giving it surroundings of the most favorable character, while the rapid stream gives power for manufacturing purposes. With these firm foundations of prosperity the growth of the place has been rapid, and it counts as its evidence of advancement five churches, one academy, two private schools, and a public school house, costing $25,000. The lumber trade of Chico is a prominent feature of its business, being facilitated by the construction of a flume, from the saw mills in the Sierra, 35 miles in length, to within 3 miles of the town, by which 60,000 feet of lumber per day is floated down at a nominal cost. Two important roads crossing the mountains have their initial points at this place, and over them are carried the mails and express for Plumas and Lassen counties. Two newspapers, the North-ern Enterprise and the Butte Record, are published weekly.
