Colusa County. Organized 1850. Bounded north by Tehama, east by Butte and Sutter, south by Yolo and west by Lake and Mendocino. Area, 2,376 square miles. Assessed valuation of property for 1874, $9,139,850. County seat, Colusa. Principal towns, Colusa, City, Jacinto, Munchville, Newville and Princeton. The principal resource of the county is agricultural, this ranking next to Stanislaus in the production of wheat, and next to Sonoma in agricultural wealth. The county is also distinguished for its fine stock of improved breeds of all domestic animals, grazing and cattle-raising having been the first of its developed enterprises. The hills of the Coast Range, which swell the western border of the county, have long been known to contain silver, quicksilver, copper, sulphur, petroleum and salt, and recent developments have shown the quicksilver deposits to be of great value. As explorations continue, and the natural resources are made known, it indicates that every portion of the county possesses wealth of an agricultural or mineral character of a high order. Munchville, near Wilbur Springs, is in the centre of the quicksilver region and is thirty-five miles south of west from the town of Colusa. The State is distinguished for its large farms, and this county presents a representative of this class. In the northern part of the county is the farm of Dr. Hugh Glenn, of 57,000
