 Santa Barbara, Santa Barbara Co, P O, Incorporated town and County seat, 435 miles south of Sacramento, occupies the site of an ancient Mission, founded in 1780, and is one of the pleasantest towns in the State. The town fronts the ocean, looking south, and in the north, 15 or 20 miles distant, rise the precipitous and picturesque mountains of Santa Ynez, whose summits reach from 2,000 to 3,000 feet above the sea, constituting a picture, mellowed by the soft atmosphere of its quiet and balmy climate, particularly romantic and lovely. Approaching the city from the sea, the grand panorama of peaceful water and pleasant town, relieved by undulating country and high mountains in the background, is presented at once to the eye. The old Mission Church, 300 feet long, of white facade, is a conspicuous object, its seat being at an elevation of about 220 feet, and distant two miles from the beach. The Santa Barbara College, and numerous churches, schools, and county buildings, are features of the town. The harbor in front is an open roadstead, exposed to the south winds, but is partly protected by an extraordinary growth of kelp, or seaweed, growing between the anchorage and the deep water of the ocean. For the accommodation of commerce, a substantial wharf of 2,000 feet in length, has been constructed, extending to deep water, at which steamers and sailing vessels lie in receiving and discharging cargo. From the wharf, State street, a broad avenue, runs through the town, a distance of two miles, and on it are the principal business houses. Water is supplied by the Santa Barbara Water Co., from streams formerly controlled by the Mission. The surrounding country is well adapted to the cultivation of fruit, and the trees and vines planted by the Jesuit Missionaries have flourished in the most remarkable manner, but every agricultural interest has been neglected. Near the town is one of the largest and most productive grape vines in the world, being more than one foot in diameter at the base, spreading over an ex-
