

EDWARD BOSQUI & CO., Stationers, Printers, and Bookbinders, corner of Clay and Leidesdorff.

the prairie by the Puget Sound Agricultural Company, and the area, for which the United States is requested to pay under the treaty of July 1st, 1863, with Great Britain, is 3,572 acres, or nearly six square miles. On this prairie the Catholics established a missionary station where recently a town has been laid out in acre lots. Here, too, was the site of the old Red Liver settlement of Canadian French, introduced under the auspices of the Hudson Bay Company in 1842. The Cowlitz is a large, rapid stream, and is still a link in the line of travel from the Columbia to Puget Sound."

Walla Walla, is an enterprising town in Walla Walla Valley, on the road leading to Lewiston, Idaho. Although a new town it has several large mercantile houses, a woolen factory, saw, planing, and flour mills, a public school and good society. Being in the midst of a good farming and grazing country it has become the center of a prosperous business. One newspaper, the News, is published weekly.

seat, formerly called Pinkney City, is on the south bank of the Petahsin River, and about 16 miles east from its junction with the Columbia. The United States military post of Fort Colville is near the town. This is one of the most important frontier towns of the west, being within a short distance of the line dividing the United States from the British possessions, and formerly was the center of a large trade; but with the decline of mining on the upper Columbia, the business of the entire section decayed. When in the height of its prosperity, consequent upon the rush of miners to the gold regions above, its streets presented a unique appearance, being filled with the representatives of civilized and savage life, showing the extreme contrast in dress and manners from the active merchant or government official to the stolid or half-clad Indian, with the grades of the semi-civilized trapper, or voyager, and the half-breeds in their deer-skins, moccasins and feathers between. Steamers from this point ascend the Columbia to La Porte, or Death Rapids, 270 miles by the course of the river, north of the mouth of the Petahsin, although business does not now justify their use.
