Lewis County. Bounded north by Thurston and Pierce, east by Yakima, south by Skamania, Clarke and Cowlitz, and west by Chehalis. Area, 1,580 square miles. Assessed valuation of property for 1874, $879,890. Population, 1,700. County seat, Chehalis. Principal towns: Bolsfort, Cowlitz, Highland, Newankum, Saunders, and Skookum Chuck. This is one of the best agricultural counties west of the Cascade Mountains, comprising within its limits the fertile valleys of the Chehalis and Cowlitz, and the broad prairies embracing their tributaries. These rivers have their sources in Lewis County, one flowing northwesterly to the Pacific, the other south to the Columbia, and both navigable, affording cheap means of transportation. To these has been added within the past few years the Northern Pacific Railroad, running from the Columbia to Puget Sound, and good wagon roads radiate from the County seat to the various surrounding localities. The eastern portion is mountainous, having the summit of the Cascade Range as its dividing line, and the western part is generally level, or rolling, and highly productive.
Officers: A. B. Dillibaugh, Probate Judge; J. P. Judson, District Attorney; A. F. Tullis, Sheriff and Tax Collector; William West, Auditor; J. H. Long, Treasurer; Nathan Howe, Assessor; H. N. Stearns, Surveyor, and Superintendent Public Schools; H. C. Bostwick, Coroner.

Mason County. Bounded north by Jefferson, east by Kitsap and Pierce, south by Thurston, and west by Chehalis. Area 1,020 square miles. Assessed valuation of property for 1874, $254,296. County seat, Oakland. Principal towns: Arcadia, Kamlichil, Lightville, and Union City. The county embraces a portion of the waters of Puget Sound, whose deep and far-reaching inlets afford numerous good harbors and milling sites. The Olympus range of mountains extend through the northern part of the county, and severans that flow to the Sound. The surface is well diversified by hills and valleys, lakes, rivers, prairies and forests, making it most attractive to settlers.

Officers: A. F. Chapman, Probate Judge; John P. Judson, District Attorney; G. W. Huntley, Sheriff; F. G. Morrow, Auditor; E. L. Willey, Treasurer; F. C. Purdy, Surveyor; Alexander Pollock, Coroner; John McKeavy, Superintendent Public Schools.

Montesano, Chehalis Co, P O and County seat, is on the south side of the Chehalis River, 15 miles from its entrance into Gray's Harbor, and is surrounded by a broad extent of exceedingly fertile land. The town contains a good school house, Masonic Hall, county buildings, etc. The river is here navigable, the harbor at the mouth is good, and the surrounding country is accessible, all of which point to the advantageous location of the town, assuring a prosperous future when the rich country shall be occupied by an industrious and enterprising population.

Monticello, Cowlitz Co, P O 8 miles n w of Kalama, at the junction of the Cowlitz with the Columbia. The site is an eligible one for business, and the town once was of considerable importance, but the building of Kalama as the terminus of the N. P. R. deprived it of much trade, and it has since declined. The resources of the place are considerable, and its former prosperity may be restored.
