Wasatch County. Organized in 1862.

Bounded north by Summit and Wyoming Territory; east by Colorado Territory; south by San Pete; and West by Utah, Salt Lake and Summit. Area, 9,500 square miles. Assessed valuation of property for 1870, $102,100. County seat, Heber. Principal towns: Center, Charleston, Midway, Uinta, and Wallsburgh. This county, in the extreme northeast, is of large area, and contains lofty mountains and broad valleys. The Uinta and Wasatch ranges of mountains cross it in the west, and spurs of the Rocky mountains enter it on the east. Many fine streams rise in the mountain ranges and generally find their outlet into the Green, but the principal river is the Provo, or Timpanagos, which rises in the Uintah Mountains, and, running southward through Provo Valley, breaks through the Wasatch range in the picturesque Provo Cañon, and empties in Utah Lake. Good farming land exists in the valley along the river, and good grazing is found, but the severity of the winter climate is a great obstacle to stock-raising. Mines of great value have been discovered, of silver, lead, copper, and coal, and mining promises to be the important interest of the county.

Officers: Thomas H. Giles, Probate Judge, and Superintendent Public Schools; Charles Shelton, Clerk and Auditor; M. J. Shelton, Prosecuting Attorney; Richard Jones, Sheriff; John Gallegher, Recorder; William McDonald, Treasurer; John Sessions, Surveyor; Thomas Rasband, Coroner; M. J. Shelton, Prosecuting Attorney.

Washington County. Organized in 1852.

Bounded north by Iron, east by Kane, south by the Territory of Arizona, and west by the State of Nevada. Area, 1,890 square miles. Assessed valuation of property for 1870, $417,520. County seat, Saint George. Principal towns: Harmony, Harrisville, Mountain Meadows, Santa Clara, and Washington. This is the extreme southwestern county of Utah, and bears the sobriquet of "Dixie." It is distinguished for its Mountain Meadows, the locality of a terrible massacre of a band of emigrants by a party of Mormons disguised as Indians. The Rio Virgen and Santa Clara run through the county, and in their valleys is a large area of very productive soil. Cotton is raised with great success, supplying the manufacturers of Utah, and during the war of Rebellion a considerable quantity was exported with profit. The cereals, and fruit, particularly grapes of all kinds, are produced abundantly, and the county, though isolated, is in quite a prosperous condition. Much attention has been given recently to mining, and several districts have been organized and smelting furnaces erected, giving evidence of the great mineral wealth of Utah.

Officers: William Snow, Probate Judge; Alden A. M. Jackson, Clerk, Recorder and Auditor; John

M. Macfarlane, Prosecuting Attorney and Surveyor; Daniel Seegmiller, Sheriff, Tax Collector and Assessor; Richard Bentley, Treasurer and Coroner; Joseph E. Johnson, Superintendent Public Schools.

Weber County. Organized in 1849.

Bounded north by Box Elder and Cache, east by Morgan, south by Davis, and west by Davis and the Great Salt Lake. Area, 540 square miles. Assessed valuation of property for 1870, $316,774. County seat, Ogden. Principal towns: Lynece, North Ogden, Plain City, Slaterville, and Union. Weber County is located in the northern part of Utah, joining the Great Salt Lake, and is crossed by the Union and Central Pacific, and Utah Central Railroads, and is entered from the north by the Utah Northern Railroad, altogether giving it a most important position. The Wasatch Mountains extend through the central part, and send forth numerous streams into the valley of the Lake, affording means of irrigation, by which large areas of land are brought under cultivation, and giving great prosperity to the industrious inhabitants. The construction of the Pacific and Utah Railroads has given an impetus to business, and other resources than that of agriculture are developing. The Weber River is the principal stream, which, after running through the entire length of the county, empties into Salt Lake.

Officers: F. D. Richards, Probate Judge; F. S. Richards, Clerk and Recorder; F. S. Richards, Prosecuting Attorney; William Brown, Sheriff; Walter Thomson, Treasurer; David Jenkins, Surveyor; Joshua Williams, Coroner; William W. Burton, Superintendent Public Schools.
