

THE PALM
CAFE

THE Palm Cafe in the farther end of the court presents a scene of activity and splendor as it teems with men and women here assembled to discuss the many dishes for which the Palace Hotel is famous. With cooking unexcelled, service perfect, music divine, one of the many pleasures of a visit to San Francisco is to dine in the well-known Palace Hotel Grills. Indeed, the management takes particular pride that the cuisine here is unsurpassed and equals that of the best hotels in the East. An animated scene is presented by the many after-theater parties which nightly meet here.

MEN'S GRILL

Just off the court in a beautiful room is the Men's Grill, noted for long as the finest place in the world to eat. Its coffee is famous throughout the land, its waffles delicious, its chop or steak is quickly served and always right, at most moderate prices. Among new things in the culinary art being introduced to help keep up the high standard is a butter-making department, where all the butter used in this, and the other dining rooms, is made from specially selected cream. Indeed, so popular has the place become that it is crowded every day by well-known business men, and even the comfort of the club is abandoned for a Palace luncheon.

COURT
AND BALCONY

PALACE. "Not a palace, but the Palace Hotel of the world, unique by itself, unexcelled even in this age of modern architecture"—this is the impression as you step through the portals into the famous court lounging room, formerly a driveway, but now inviting to ease and comfort by its beautiful and costly furniture placed upon rich, red rugs, and amidst palms and tropical plants in great profusion. On the balcony above has been installed at enormous cost an Aeolian pipe organ, which, with a famous orchestra, discourses sweet music daily for the enjoyment of the fortunate guests.

COURT
AND BALCONY

In no other hotel in the world can be seen a feature like this Court. In the center growing in an immense stone urn, is a monster palm, typical of California. Around this for years circled the many carriages which brought right into the hotel the sight-seeing travelers and tourists. Sometime ago the management changed all this and paved the entire Court with marble. Around the four sides are large settees and massive chairs with curious carvings. Here and there are tables with beautiful brass lamps and red shades. Over there some quaint mahogany writing desks, and with it all a perfect harmony. At night the electric light make a fairyland.
