

The foregoing embraces the most of the schools now in operation in the city, but there are a number of others principally devoted to primary studies which we have been unable to visit, and which in the aggregate afford elementary instruction to several hundred children, male and female.

The aggregate thus exhibited we think fully sustains the proposition that education is of cardinal consideration in our good city of San Francisco.

Societies—Religious, Benevolent and Protective.

Our Appendix contains a full list of charitable associations and organizations established for the benefit and improvement of every class of humanity requiring aid and encouragement. Copious explanations and historical observations, in the Appendix, give the desired information concerning each of these societies separately, and leave but little to be said in this place, except of a general nature. It is, however, meet and pleasing to note the continued and regular increase in the number and importance of these indices of modern christian civilization in our midst. In the earliest phase of its American occupancy, steps were taken in San Francisco, by planting schools and by incipient organizations of a charitable character, to vindicate our right to the name of a civilized and christian people, and, in the tremendous whirl of the first gold excitement, if organization was necessarily for the time destroyed or suppressed, the land teemed with instances of individual charity, and of local and temporary combinations to aid the needy, which have had no parallel in number and extent in any other land. When again men settled into regular business, and San Francisco began to assume the proportions of a metropolis, her citizens, fully conscious of the duty which society owes to God and itself, to cherish its unprotected members—too young or too feeble from any cause for self-support—cheerfully entered upon the course necessary for its performance.

A glance at our earliest issue of the DIRECTORY and a comparison with each succeeding volume, will show how faithfully this holy duty has been discharged. All who feel a just pride in the progress of our city, who have gone with us through our Schools, public and private, our Churches, Hospitals, Orphan Asylums, Deaf and Dumb Institution, Magdalen Asylum, Christian Association, Bible and Tract Societies, Seamen's Friend Society, Sunday Schools, Industrial School, and the many other institutions which we have not room to name here, cannot fail to arise from the contemplation with hope invigorated, and confidence firmly established in the future of a city which, in its infancy, has done so much for humanity.

SABBATH SCHOOLS.

The Sabbath Schools connected with the different churches continue in a prosperous condition.

SABBATH SCHOOL UNION.

The Union was re organized May, 1857.

The anniversary was held on the 15th of June, 1862, in Platt's New Music Hall, when reports were read by the Secretary from the different schools, showing them to be in a very encouraging and prosperous condition.

The most pleasing feature connected with the schools is the energy, perseverance, and entire self-devotion manifested by the officers and teachers in their efforts to forward the glorious work of bringing the young and tender lambs into the fold of the Redeemer.

One addition has been made, during the past year: The First Baptist Mission School.

The mortality has been greater than reported at any previous anniversary, 19 deaths having occurred.

Officers elected for the ensuing year:

President, L. B. Benchley; Vice-Presidents, William H. Codrington, J. B. Roberts, A. B. Forbes, Wales L. Palmer; Secretary and Treasurer, Ellis M. Furbush.
