(CARD FROM BRADLEY & RULOFSON.)

It is but a few years since the crude and perishable daguerreotype, packed in a clumsy case of wood and leather, was looked upon as the perfection of scientific skill, and the highest attainable result in the wonderful art of "sun painting." How different is it now! One discovery has led to another, until "photography" is now not only to be classed as emphatically one of the fine arts, but has entered into and become an indispensable part of a thousand trades and branches of business, everywhere simplifying, beautifying, perpetuating and competing with printing, for the rightful designation of "art preservative of all arts." It re-
