Colleges and Private Schools.

Notwithstanding the excellence of the free public schools of the city and State, their exemption from direct cost to the pupil or parent, and the great interest taken in them by the public as the nurse and strength of our free institutions, colleges and private schools of great wealth, popularity, and importance rise and prosper. That such institutions exist, show the great interest taken in educational matters. The public and private systems are rivals, each stimulating the other, and setting examples of enterprise, management, salaries, edifices, progress, and standard of scholarships. There are in San Francisco about one hundred private schools, in which term are included the select school of a few pupils, the seminaries, commercial schools, academies, convent schools, and colleges, with their thousand students. The Census Marshal reported the number of youth attending private and church schools in this city in June, 1879 (not including Chinese) at 7,224, an increase over the preceding year of 673. This increase in number is followed by the increase in buildings, many of the private schools having edifices of great capacity, cost, and grand architectural appearance.

THE SACRED HEART COLLEGE, located on the corner of Eddy and Larkin streets, is a wooden structure of three high stories and basement, and covering a large portion of the block. This is conducted by the "Christian Brothers," under the direction of Brother Genebern. The number of students is 700. The object of this institution is to give a thoroughly Christian and secular education, embracing the classical, scientific, and commercial courses.

THE SACRED HEART PRESENTATION CONVENT is a fine brick building of ample proportions, located at the corner of Taylor and Ellis streets. This is a chartered college by Act of the Legislature, and empowered to confer graduating certificates. The school is free of charge to all denominations. It was opened on the 24th of May, 1869, and the number of pupils increasing, made it necessary to enlarge the building, and in 1870 the portion fronting on Ellis street was added. Later on, a wing within the enclosure was built, to afford more ample facilities for the improvement of pupils in music, needlework, painting, drawing, etc. The institution contains 600 pupils, and is under the charge of Mother Mary Bernard Comerford.
