CONGREGATIONAL HOME MISSIONARY SOCIETY. The Congregational Home Missionary Society, as an organization, began in 1826. Its principles, however, have been dominant in our churches from 1620 onward. Its aim is the realization of the ideal Christian state; its method, to carry the Gospel into destitute regions, and to aid Christian institutions temporarily needy. It has expended $19,656,403 in money and supplies ($651,491 during the last year). It has organized and maintained 6,500 churches, into which have gathered 459,015 members. It has 227 missionaries preaching in foreign languages. The California Home Missionary Society, a branch of the National Society, was organized in 1852, its field covering the State. In 1887 the territory was divided at the northern line of Kern county, and the Southern California Home Missionary Society was organized. The work is pushed forward as rapidly as funds will allow. Church organizations continually come, which are responded to as fast as the funds in hand allow. For such funds the Society depends upon the Congregational Churches of the State. James K. Harrison, Superintendent of Northern California and Nevada, Congregational Headquarters, corner Mason and Ellis streets.
