WILLIAM HENRY PERKINS. WHO SEEKS A WIFE AMONG

WILLING TO BECOME MARTYR

IN CAUSE OF MATRIMONY

THE REFUGEES OF SAN FRANCISCO William Henry Perkins, possessed of a strong right arm, worldly goodr sufficient unto the needs of the day and a realization of the blessings thereof, has also an abnormal sense of duty,

William Henry Perkins will offer himself upon the matrimonial altar in the cause of any one of the various and many damaels in distrems by reason of the recent disaster

And yet there are croakers who sigh and say the age of chivalry is passed It is not so. A knight as gallant ha any who ever raised a spear for set a man could possess in searching femininity in distress centuries ago, is this twentieth century knight. Sir William Henry, who openly proclaims his castle at No. 1706 Tenth street open to any damsel who can make wrong. She confesses to the experiences Kent, 23, both of Oakland; Theo, Gel good in his few specified requirements. of guiding the affairs of nine children, son, 42, of Napa, and Anna Gottschall For her he will cheerfully dig down it surely is a comfortable motherly 28, of San Francisco: Joseph A. Alinto his jeans to replace the finery de- shoulder and a sympathetic car that varez, 28, and Annie Jorgensen, 22, both

The major requirement is that she be good. A reasonable love of pleasure and an inclination toward affairs of gayety will be countenanced if she also hath an inclination toward things churchy and can keep a house and "make a cherry ple in a minute."

His gallant and magnanimous offer would extend further than in a single casa did the limiting laws of our state permit. His sense of duty in very

When the cry of distress arose from the girls whose homes, situations, finery and entire where-with-all for existence was swept away by the fire, Perkins arose to the occasion nobly. The situation presented itself to him as a glowing opportunity for single men to score. He would marry one girl and remove her from the numerous delegations of refugees. That would help some.

A crisis like the present seemed to Perkins no time for Idle sentiment. It was duty that kept jogging him in the ribs.

He took a day off from his work as switchman in the West Gakland yards, and visited a repository in San Francisco where the greatest supply of forlorn damaels are temporarily quartered. He asked to look over the stock on hand. The stock was, low, however, scarcely a representative supply, those in charge thought, and Perkins could only explain his errand and leave an order.

Any aspiring to become the idol of the Perkins heart and the despair of the Perking pocketbook are instructed to make application at the family home on Tenth street. She will be more favorable in the Perkins sight, perhaps, if she be rather small and blonde. Not too small and not too blonde.

Widows, alfalfa or otherwise, are harred absolutely

In lieu of the presence of her possibly future lord and master, when she calls, Mother Perkins will give ear and will register applications. Mother Perkins in by the way about the best onfor a wife. She is ample and comfortable with that incomparable manner that suggests a capability to right things 'that seem possessed to go all
